

The Small Amount and Short Term Insurance (SASTI) Association regards solitary deaths as a societal problem, and continues to work with the government to reduce this issue. Solitary deaths occur mostly in single-person households living in rented premises. Since SASTI companies provide insurance focused on the rental housing market, they are supporting efforts to reduce solitary death cases which would improve their loss record.

The government has published data, including forecast values, that point to an increase in single-person households and an increase in socially isolated people.

In addition, the SASTI Association announced the current state of insurance for isolated death, which is unique in coverage compared to other countries. We would like to convey this data and would appreciate it if you could reference this for your underwriting.
